A Brief Military History of Salisbury, Conn. (with index),	125

THE SALISBURY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED

THE SALISBURY ASSOCIATION, INCORPORATED exists because the public spirited citizens of Salisbury, Connecticut believed that various kinds of work making for town improvement could be done more effectively, and with less friction and misdirection of energy, by a business-like organization, than by the occasional efforts of small groups of persons. To put it concisely, The Association stands for coöperation in all civic matters that may properly be fostered by it, without duplicating or interfering with the activities of other existing organizations that are necessarily more limited in their scope.

The Association was incorporated, without capital stock, on August 23, 1902, and in the language of its corporate certificate, as amended in 1913,—“The purpose or object of this corporation is to generally further the best interests of the Town of Salisbury and to protect and develop its natural attractions; and to hold and conduct carnivals, fairs, athletic competitions, and horticultural exhibitions, competitions and meetings.”

In July, 1903, a very successful “Old Home Week” celebration was held under the auspices of The Association, at which time over a hundred persons became members of it, most of whom have retained continuous membership for the past ten years.

From time to time The Association has subscribed to various public improvements, and in the early years of its existence set out over five hundred shade trees along the town highways.

On September 1, 1913, The Association’s first Fair, consisting principally of agricultural, horticultural and domestic exhibits, was conducted at Salisbury Center, and aroused a spirit of friendly competition that will surely result in the gradual improvement of all kinds of agricultural conditions in this locality. On account of the general interest shown in the Fair, both by exhibitors and by four to five thousand spectators, it will be held again in 1914.

The increase in membership has been so great during the past six months that 477 persons are now enrolled; 262 of them live in the Town of Salisbury and the other 215 represent twenty-two states of the Union and one foreign country. Although The Association's chief dependence is on its local membership, it can only attain its maximum strength by being a country-wide Salisbury society, as well. In the past, Salisbury has been the mother of towns, and has given of her best to Vermont, New York, Ohio and the West, and there are hundreds of people of Salisbury origin, living elsewhere, who still think of her with interest and affection. To all these, membership in The Association, entailing as it does an almost nominal pecuniary obligation, cannot be other than a social bond, enhancing in many ways the pleasure of occasional visits here, and renewing, by proxy, personal activity in behalf of the Town and its people.

There are too, aside from sentiment, material reasons for joining The Association. Each member is entitled to free admission to the Fair, and also receives a copy of any publication issued by The Association.

The Association intends to issue, annually, a volume similar to this one, so that, in the course of a few years the original sources of town history will be in print, and conveniently accessible. This work is of great importance as the original records whether in manuscript or on stone are liable to damage or loss, and the only sure method of preserving them for posterity is to place printed duplicates of them (so far as the data is concerned) in many hands, as speedily as possible.

The fiscal year of The Association commences on October 1st, and the membership fee for one year is $1.00, paid in advance. Men, women and children everywhere, who have an interest in Salisbury and its welfare, are cordially invited to join The Association, which is unique in its inception and aims, and absolutely unhampered by "red tape" or self-interest, either in the acquisition of members, or in the administration of its affairs.

VITAL RECORDS OF SALISBURY TOWN

Circa 1730-1767

CEMETERY RECORDS

INTRODUCTION

Researches among the official documentary sources of Connecticut local history are usually made for the purpose of clarifying.—(a) general history, (b) genealogy, (c) real estate titles, (d) distribution of estates. Town Meeting Records (a), Vital Records (b), Land Records (including those of the Original Proprietors) (c) and Probate Records (d) are the respective classes of records to which the searcher must refer. These various classes are naturally complementary to each other, and frequently all of them must be consulted in conducting what may have been begun as a research in one class only. This is invariably true of comprehensive genealogical research.

To the continually increasing number of students of family history, vital records are of the first importance. For this reason and because of the comparative ease with which these records can be copied and arranged, they have been selected for publication in this and subsequent volumes of Collections, with the intention of printing this class of our records to about the year 1850.

The vital records in this volume furnish a striking instance of the changes in surnames occurring in a community in less than two hundred years. Of the one hundred and seventy distinct family names which appear in the following list, only twenty are found here now, and not over ten of these can be identified with the old local families of the same names.

During the period 1730-1770 the family names which occur most frequently are:—Benton, Bingham, Bird, Camp, Chipman, Dutcher, Evarts, Fitch, Jewell, Landon, Lee, Moore, Owen, Reed, White and Woodworth. The vital record entries under these sixteen names exceed four hundred and seventy-five. To-day only five of these families have representatives in the male line resident here, and their total, for the five families, is only about twenty.

It should not be hastily inferred, however, that the old stock has "run out." On the contrary the cases of extinction from natural causes are rare, and the disappearance of the majority of these families from this region is accounted for by their removal to newer sections of the country as they were opened to settlement.

The official recording of births, marriages and deaths in Salisbury began with the election of the first Town Clerk in 1741. A birth was recorded and space was reserved immediately after the entry to allow for the recording of subsequent births in the same family. Death dates were sometimes recorded in direct connection with the original birth dates. In this way families were grouped as to births (except where space did not admit of it) and partially as to deaths, but marriages and many deaths were entered in the order in which they occurred, regardless of arrangement as to surnames. Again, the Clerk, occasionally, and presumably by request, recorded a birth that occurred elsewhere, prior to the settlement of the child's parents here. Again, some births antedating 1741, as for instance that of Margaret Dutcher, b. Sept. 26, 1734, probably did occur here, but were not recorded at the time they occurred, because no local office of record had then been established. On the other hand it must be remembered that there was probably no uniformity about the post-recording of such events that occurred prior to 1741, and it is inferential that a considerable number of births, marriages and deaths occurred here between 1719-20 (when the settlement at Weatogue on the Housatonic was commenced) and 1741, that were not recorded at all.

This somewhat detailed explanation is made, because the family group system of recording was in operation here for over a century, until it was superseded by a more exact method.

It must also be remembered that there was every chance for omissions in the early town records, owing to general conditions and to an inadequate and casual system of recording. All things considered, it is surprising that we have so great a mass of data as does exist, and in any event, whatever the omissions or commissions may be, we cannot "go back of the returns."

In arranging the following vital record data for publication the spelling of surnames, baptismal and place names has been retained as in the original record, and every item of actual information has been included, but the order of the original has necessarily been changed by the alphabetical arrangement, and words that are either obsolete or unnecessary to the sense have been omitted.

A transcript of the following records was made by the writer twenty years ago, and during the past winter each entry was transferred to a card index, which in turn was compared with the original record, in order to rectify any errors or omissions in the transcript.

The valuable assistance rendered by William B. Perry, Jr., Donald J. Warner, Richard K. Miles and William P. Russell (all members of The Association) in checking back the card index and in transcribing the records in several cemeteries, is gratefully acknowledged. The labor of compilation has also been greatly lessened by the painstaking and accurate stenographic work of Miss Gertrude Miner.

CEMETERY RECORDS

INTRODUCTION

The earliest burial-places of the settlers of Salisbury cannot now be identified. No monuments remain (or were ever erected probably) to preserve the memory of those who died here prior to 1750, and only forty inscriptions remain for the period 1750-1771.

The old church-yard behind the Town Hall at Salisbury Center is the earliest prescribed burial-place in town of which we have certain knowledge. The greater part of it was given to the town, on May 29, 1750, by Robert Walker of Stratford, one of the original proprietors of Salisbury. Crossman (see note, p. 132) asserts that the first person buried in this cemetery, or as he says, "by the meeting-house," was Jehiel Moore. A child of this name, who died June 15, 1750 (see Vital Records), is doubtless the one referred to, but no gravestone remains to corroborate the assertion. The monument standing in this yard and erected in memory of Dr. Wade Clark, states that he died Aug. 6, 1750, and this is the earliest death date appearing on any gravestone now found within the limits of the town.

The three hundred inscriptions found in this old Center cemetery, together with those prior to 1800 found at Lime Rock and a few others found in isolated places, were published in pamphlet form in 1898. As a considerable part of that edition is still on hand, it has been thought unnecessary to reprint the inscriptions in this compilation.

The object of the present issue is to put into print all the other gravestone records (688 inscriptions) of the town with the exception of those in the "New Cemetery" at Salisbury Center, and those at Lime Rock after 1800, which will appear in a future issue of the Collections.

Aside from the sentimental interest attaching to gravestone inscriptions, their historical value is very great, for several reasons. The first is that prior to, say 1845, our vital record system was so defective that many deaths were not recorded, and such omitted names and dates are frequently supplied by gravestones. A case in point is that of Dr. Wade Clark, and many others might be mentioned. Secondly, gravestones almost invariably state "age at death," and relationships as well, in the case of women and children—details which were frequently omitted from the manuscript record. Thirdly, gravestones often give further details as to titles, occupation, place and date of birth, manner of death, etc., which are not to be found elsewhere. Our ancient gravestones are also in a general sense indicative of the civic and social status of the persons commemorated, and of the esteem in which they were held, to a greater degree, perhaps, than modern monuments are. This because skilled stone-cutters were scarce, suitable kinds of stone difficult to procure and means of transportation most primitive. Consequently the expenditure of much time and labor on the part of relatives or friends was absolutely essential to the erection of such memorials. And finally, in spite of the apparent imperishability of stone, our climatic conditions cause comparatively rapid disintegration. Many early inscriptions have become illegible in so short a space as fifteen years, and some of much later date will soon be in the same case. It must be manifest therefore even to persons who instinctively regard "grave-yarding" as a melancholy and unnatural sort of avocation, that the preservation of this class of records is a matter of public service and benefit.

It may be that as this Association grows in membership and resources it can assume, to some extent, the care of several of our older cemeteries which need more attention than they are receiving now, and make of them places that are attractive rather than repellent. Town Hill Cemetery is an example of what the thought and effort of a few individuals can accomplish in the way of keeping beautiful a spot that is wholly beautiful by nature. By way of contrast, Dutcher's Bridge Cemetery, with less to commend it as to situation, is made still more unsightly by its generally neglected condition.

In this compilation it will be noted that surnames and baptismal names have been arranged alphabetically, by cemeteries. Formulæ, and versification, curious or otherwise, not necessary to the sense, have been omitted, but every item of biographical value found is here noted.

As to the method of making these lists it is proper to say that complete transcripts of the Town Hill and Chapinville Cemeteries were made in 1898 and partial transcripts of Dutcher's Bridge yard in 1893, and of Mt. Riga yard in 1901. During the present year (1913) such transcripts as were partial, were completed, and card indexed, and all of them (except those covering several of the small isolated yards) were verified by comparison with the original inscriptions.

CHAPINVILLE CEMETERY

This cemetery is situated about three-fifths of a mile east of Chapinville church, at the intersection of the roads that lead to Twin Lakes and Cooper Hill respectively.

This yard is one-half acre in area and was deeded to the town by John Weldon on Jan. 5, 1789 (see Land Records, Vol. 8, p. 41). The consideration was forty shillings, and the purchase was made pursuant to a town vote, passed Dec. 1, 1788. At that time the dwelling house of William Bement stood near the enclosure.

This yard receives very little attention as to up-keep, but at the present time is in fairly good condition.

DUTCHER'S BRIDGE CEMETERY

This cemetery is situated in Weatogue about a third of a mile northwest of Dutcher's Bridge. It was purchased by the town on Nov. 8, 1802, for a consideration of one dollar paid to Capt. Ruluff Dutcher of Canaan (see Land Records, Book 11, p. 93) and it is stated in the deed "that an ancient burying ground" was included in the purchase. The grantor stipulated that the plot should be fenced by the town and he reserved for himself and his heirs the right to pasture sheep and calves within it.

This cemetery is in a sadly neglected condition most of the time. A small amount of money expended upon grading and more frequent mowings would improve it greatly. Nearly all of the stones are clean and well preserved.

MT. RIGA CEMETERY

This cemetery, consisting of a plot of one-quarter of an acre in extent, was purchased by the town April 26, 1817 (see Land Records, Vol. 14, p. 281) from Holley, Coffing & Pettee, for the sum of two dollars. The purchase was made pursuant to town vote of April 8, 1816, authorizing the selectmen to take conveyance of land for a burying place "near the Mt. Furnace." In the deed it is spoken of as being on Tocannick Mt. It is situated near the north end of the middle road, about one-eighth of a mile from its juncture with the west road, in what was formerly the hamlet of Mt. Riga.

This little plot is seldom visited and shows signs of neglect, except in that part of it which is occasionally used for interments.

TOWN HILL CEMETERY

This Cemetery is nearly as old as the one at the Center. A tradition existing in the Bissell family was recently repeated by Mr. Charles H. Bissell. It is to the effect that one Seth Cary, a carpenter, was killed by falling from a house which he was helping to erect for one of the early settlers of the Bissell name, and that he was buried on Town Hill in a place which, on the very day of his burial, became by town vote a public cemetery. This tradition is verified by Seth Cary's gravestone bearing the date of his death as April 11, 1757, and by the entry in Salisbury Town Meeting Records, under the same date, April 11, 1757, authorizing the setting off of "a part of the Market Place or Green on the Town Hill so called, for a burying Place, in the most convenient part of said Green."

This ground is adjacent to the property of The Hotchkiss School. Interments in it are infrequent and probably do not average one a year. Until recently little attention was given to its appearance, but several years ago, an expensive and substantial stone post and iron rail fence was placed around the yard by Mrs. H. M. Gillette, who also joined Mr. C. H. Bissell in having the enclosure graded, and the monuments put in as good condition as was possible. Since then a permanent up-keep fund has been raised, chiefly by the Bissell and Landon families, assisted by other persons interested, which will eventually yield a handsome annual income.

* The seven Reed inscriptions above, three Gay, one Cotter and one Sheldon, appearing elsewhere in this list, all of which are preceded by a marginal (R), are properly included in this index, although the stones from which they were taken are not now standing. About 1898 they were taken up and piled in a lot near the Wells Hill Track, on the cross road from Horace Landon's to Wells' Farm House. In their stead a granite block was placed in the Cemetery, on which all the names and dates (years only) were placed. The data given here was taken from the original stones in 1898. M. D. R.

FIVE ISOLATED CEMETERIES

The following forty-five inscriptions were collected from five isolated cemeteries and are arranged alphabetically for the sake of convenient reference.

KEY.

All inscriptions preceded by (1) were taken, in 1912, from stones standing near the residence of the late Edward Ward. They occupy, in common with what appear to be a considerable number of unmarked graves, a sort of wooded island in the midst of cultivated land, which is situated about midway between the Housatonic River and the highway leading from the Ward place to Amesville.

All inscriptions preceded by (2) were taken, in 1898, from stones standing near the present residence of Horace Landon (formerly that of the Walton family) on Town Hill, on the south side of the road leading from The Hotchkiss School to Lime Rock.

The two inscriptions preceded by (3) were taken, in 1898, from stones standing in an apple orchard a few rods southeast of the present residence of Horace Landon, and on the north side of the road to Lime Rock.

All inscriptions preceded by (4) were taken, in 1898, from stones standing in a secluded spot not over one-half mile west of the present residence of J. William Greenwood. This yard is in Massachusetts a short distance north of the Massachusetts-Connecticut state line.

All inscriptions preceded by (5) were taken, in 1898, from stones standing in a small yard a few rods east of the Under Mountain Road, about a quarter of a mile north of Sage's Ravine highway bridge. This yard is also in Massachusetts, and almost directly across the valley from No. 4, next above.

In Nos. 1, 4 and 5 above, there are a number of unmarked graves.

PART II

A BRIEF MILITARY HISTORY OF
SALISBURY, CONNECTICUT

AN ADDRESS, DELIVERED BY MALCOLM D. RUDD, AT THE TOWN HALL, SALISBURY, MAY 30, 1911

NOTE.

A roll of Salisbury men in service in the French and Indian War, Revolutionary War, War of 1812, and Mexican War, giving all particulars of service, so far as obtainable, is in course of preparation, and will appear in some later issue of "Collections," possibly in the 1914 volume.

Mr. Chairman, Veterans and Fellow Citizens:—

Seldom, if ever before, have you been addressed on May 30th by one who was not personally familiar with the events which this anniversary recalls. Still, as you listened last year to the inspiring story of Salisbury's part in the Civil War, as told by a participant in that great conflict, and as the door to reminiscence in those matters is closed to me, I am sure you will permit me to revert to earlier periods of our history and review them briefly in their relation to military affairs. This we may properly do because Memorial Day, though primarily connected with the War between the States, is in a larger sense commemorative of the personal bravery, sacrifices and achievements of the men who defended this country in the old days against its enemies and finally established and maintained its independence.

Citizen-soldiering in New England in the days when Salisbury was settled was a serious and constantly recurring occupation. It did not consist in uniformity of dress and equipment, precise knowledge of tactics, stated terms of enlistment and remote possibilities of active service, but called rather for continual vigilance, self-reliance, resourcefulness and skill in what we now term guerilla warfare, in meeting issues that were chiefly local.

When we think, by way of contrast, of the way in which our own lives and possessions are protected against acts of personal violence, we must be filled with gratitude toward those pioneers who broke down the barriers of nature and the obstacles set up by men, and sturdily defended the homes they had won for themselves and for us.

The settlers of Salisbury instinctively kept a watchful eye on the Indians, but had no actual conflict with them. The natives, though numerous, had through long intercourse with the settlements on the Connecticut on one side and the Hudson on the other, become for the most part peaceable and friendly if not even servile.

You will recall that King Philip's War made an end to the racial power of Connecticut Indians, and that thereafter they ceased to be an active menace to the white settlers.

Probably the earliest historical event connected with this immediate locality occurred near the close of that war, when a considerable body of Indians were pursued from Westfield and overtaken on the banks of the Housatonic, near Sheffield line, by Maj. John Talcott and his Connecticut troops.* How well these colonists had learned to fight the sons of the forest is shown by their success in ambushing them, and killing or capturing about fifty warriors. This was in the summer of 1676, forty-three years before the first white settler brought his household goods to the vale of Weatogue.

We learn nothing of controversies with the resident Indians until shortly after the incorporation of the town in 1741, of which more anon.

In our day we Americans are so sufficient unto ourselves that we need give little thought to European affairs as directly affecting our lives or actions, but one hundred and seventy-five years ago, the governmental difficulties of our ancestors were generally due to the decisions of Kings and Ministers in distant France and England. In this connection our own peculiar geographical location must be taken into account. This northwest corner of what is now Litchfield County comprised the waste lands of the Colony for nearly a hundred years after the River Settlements were well established. Along the Sound and up the rivers the parent towns speedily colonized the adjacent country, but knowledge of the northwestern lands was vague—mountains and lakes abounded, and it was not supposed that there was enough tillable area to support a settlement. But land speculation was a mania even then, as it afforded one of the few kinds of investments open to those who had amassed wealth in inland trade or commerce on the seas. The original grantees of Salisbury under the Colony were nearly all speculators, pure and simple, in that business at least. Their investment was made on the strength of the further reports of the Colony's surveyors, that these parts were not such

* Trumbull's Hist. of Conn., Vol. I, p. 292 (Edition of 1898). Church's Hist. Address, 1841, p. 68.

“a bad lot” after all. It would seem that fully one-half of these original purchasers or proprietors had not the remotest idea of personal removal to this wild region, a conjecture which is supported by the sale of their rights at a good advance to the real settlers who were hardy enough to leave the lowlands and attempt the hills.

This town then, in 1740, was a frontier settlement, and directly to the north of it, hugging the western boundary of Massachusetts, were other frontier towns, which together with the fringe of settlements on the Hudson River represented the advance of civilization, gradually pushing its way from the New England seaboard to the Great Lakes.

Directly to the west of us the Hudson and the Catskills presented a barrier to hostile invasion, but to the north lay the paths along Lakes George and Champlain to the French settlements in Canada, which were a constant menace to the peace of our forefathers, and when England was at war with France, which was the case almost continually from 1744 to 1763, there was no security on the frontiers. “What next may we expect from the French and their Indians?” must have been the question oftenest asked by Salisbury men in those troublous times. To go back a bit,—from the Peace of Utrecht in 1713 to the war of the Austrian Succession, beginning in 1740, England and France were nominally at peace, but incidental to England’s espousal of Austria, King George’s War occurred in the Colonies.

At this time then, 1744, almost coincident with the organization of the town, our military history really begins. With the opening of hostilities, the general alarm was greatly increased in this locality by persistent rumors that the Moravian Missionaries were inciting the Indians to insurrection all through the present Dutchess Valley. This was a far cry and a false one. The Moravians at Shekomeko near Pine Plains, and Gnadensee (Indian Pond), had already christianized many natives, and secured some following among the whites as well, and their activity was most annoying to the orthodox churches. In consequence of this, ulterior motives were unquestionably imputed to the Moravians and legislation was invoked to drive them from their undertakings. The charges which were brought against them appear groundless in the light of later investigation, but they served to put the missionaries in bad odor, and at the same time to cause additional alarm to the settlers who were in an apprehensive state of mind. The following letters addressed to Gov. Law clearly show the popular impression then prevalent:—

It will be seen from this that Salisbury, just come into existence, was in no position to offer assistance to the common cause, but was rather in need of it herself. But settlers were coming in rapidly and a year and a half later she joined Canaan and Sharon in presenting the following noteworthy petition:

*Western Connecticut Petition to the Committee of War.

To the Hon^{ble} Comm^{tee} of war.

The Sence we have not only of the Disadvantage of frequent Alarms, but also of the Danger, we with the rest of the frontiers are continually in from the Enemy at Crown Point, who can Soon come down and that undiscovered, obliges us with Submission to Propose to your Honours an Expedition to Crown Point we find the People in these Towns spirited for it, believe Many men May be had as voluntiers from amongst us. The winter we perceive must be the time for Reducing Crown point, for this Reason viz: because of the Bog Meadow of about thirty Miles which we understand cant be passed with Cannon and Stores in the Summer time Captn Williams of Stockbridge with Mr John Lyddius are tomorrow Setting out to Boston upon the Business of an Expedition if Possible it can be accomplished, and without the Reduction of that place we cant flatter ourselves with hopes Either of Quiet or Safety. And if your Honours Think fit to take it into your wise Consideration, & order any Service to be done in order to promote the Same, we Stand Ready to use our Interest and Endeavours as far as Possible we can for the Safety and Peace of ourselves and the good of our Country; which we are always ready to advance by all that Lies in the Power of your Honours Dutiful Serv^{ts} to subsequent generations, we owe primarily the large measure of devotion displayed by our citizens in later conflicts, and latent in us to this day.

Under date Dec. 14, 1745, Wolcott writes to Gov. Law:—*

I enclose a Letter to us Containing a Contrivance of some Gentlemen on the frontiers to make an Attempt upon Crown Point their fearfull Apprehensions of Danger from those quarters has Engaged them Earnestly in it and Indeed that fort like Pandoras box is full of all Mischief to us and it is of the Greatest Importance to reduce it if possible but such an Enterprize must be the undertaking of severall Governmts in which the Govrs must Lead the Councill here have therefore Directed me to send it to your Honr who will proceed in it as in your Wisdom you think best.

The suggested expedition to Crown Point was not undertaken then because of lack of coöperation among the Colonies, but the suggestion was a good one, and was of necessity acted on ten years later.

With the capture of Louisburg the war in the Colonies was practically ended, although peace was not declared till 1748. The ensuing period of quiet was of short duration, however, as the "American edition" of the Seven Years War, which convulsed Europe, came out here in 1755. It was precipitated by the continued encroachments of the French in the Ohio Valley, and was known, on this side of the water, as the French and Indian War.

Our ancient chronicler, Crossman,† says that about 1740 there were only sixteen families settled in Salisbury—probably not above one hundred persons, but so rapidly did the population increase that it was estimated at eleven hundred in 1756. This meant that the town was well established and able to do its full part in the impending conflict. Connecticut military records for this period are incomplete, but from such as exist it appears that the willingness of our citizens to serve their country was unabated.

In the campaign of 1755 against Crown Point, Connecticut levied several regiments. In the second of these, Capt. Samuel

† New Year Sermon, 1803 (the first printed contribution to Salisbury History), by Rev. Joseph Warren Crossman, second settled pastor of Salisbury Congregational Church.

Bellows of Salisbury commanded the 8th Company; enlistment in it was not confined to this town, but a number of Salisbury names stand on its roll.

In the Company of Lieut.-Col. Whiting, in the same regiment, served Corporals Isaac Bird and Jonathan Chipman and privates Nathaniel Buell, Timothy Chittenden and Lot Norton. This trio of privates were of the same age, twenty-two years, and died within several years of each other, nearly sixty years later, after most honorable and useful careers. In this same Company were also Simeon Strong, John Hammer, four Woodworths and three Tuttlés. In the second year of the war, 1756, four regiments were raised by the Assembly, in the first of which Rev. Jonathan Lee of Salisbury was Chaplain. The Company of Capt. Jeffry of Cornwall, in the 3rd regiment, contained some twenty Salisbury men.

In 1757, fully seventy-five Salisbury men marched to the relief of Fort William Henry on Lake George. They were distributed as follows,—a half dozen in Capt. Marsh's Litchfield Company, a dozen or so in Lieut.-Col. Whiting's Canaan Company, twenty-five who rode their own horses, in Capt. Moses Lyman's Goshen Company and thirty-five in the Company commanded by Capt. Stevens of Canaan, whose Lieutenants were Jonathan More and Joseph Lee of Salisbury. These figures indicate that nearly one-third of the adult male population of Salisbury was in active military service in 1757.

In 1758 the number was not as large but the quota was filled. Nathaniel Evarts was Captain of a Company in the 4th Regt., in which served Nathaniel Buell, now a Sergeant, and a number of Salisbury rank and file.

In 1759, Lieut. Isaac Peck, Nathaniel Buell, now an Ensign, Sergeant Andrew Barton, Corporal Samuel Skinner and a half dozen privates appear in the 3rd Regiment Company of Capt. Elmore of Sharon, and in the Company of Capt. Tarball Whitney of Canaan were enrolled Corporal John Nichols and another half dozen privates.

In 1760-'62, the town's quota served for the most part in Capt. Elmore's Company, above mentioned.

Unfortunately no one will ever know just how many of these men died in service or incurred disabilities for life. This because the military records are defective, and no pension system existed. Contemporary town records occasionally supply a name and date as in the case of John Hutchinson who "died, a soldier, at ye Jarmon Flats in his return from Oswego, Oct. 19, 1760, in his 19th year." Another soldier, Weston Gifford, is recorded by Capt. Bellows, as dying in 1756, at his (Bellows') house in the north part of the town, on the return of the Crown Point Expedition.

Captains Bellows and Evarts, and Lieutenants Peck and Buell were the only commissioned officers from Salisbury in the Colony's volunteer service in the old French war, but the militia was not inactive, and Captains James Landon and Samuel Moore as Commanders of the two train-bands or militia companies of the town deserve a share of the credit for the town's good showing.

The capture of Fort William Henry by Montcalm in July, 1757, caused general alarm. What was left of the garrison at the Fort, after Montcalm's Indians had violated his pledge of safe-conduct, and had their way with the prisoners, took refuge fifteen miles away at Fort Edward on the upper reaches of the Hudson. But contrary to expectation Montcalm did not follow up his victory by attacking Fort Edward, and our townsmen, although evidently prepared to march, did not receive the order to do so.

The following original papers, in the possession of the writer, may be of interest in this connection, as showing the method employed in levying on the militia, and the sort of equipment that was considered sufficient in those days:—

This document is a printed form and directs Capt. Moore to enlist or detach three able-bodied and effective men from his company and to keep them in readiness to march when ordered.

The issuance of this order was pursuant to an act of the General Assembly sitting in New Haven on the second Thursday of Oct., 1756, “that there be forthwith raised and sent forward to our Army at Lake George eight Companies; each to consist of one Hundred able-bodied and efficient Men, inclusive of Officers.”

These troops were to be properly accoutered and voluntary enlistment carried with it a premium or bounty of 18 shillings “to be paid before their Departure out of the Government.”

In spite of the hardships which the war inflicted on Connecticut and her sister colonies, it was in one way, at least, advantageous to them. The provincial troops, acting in concert with the Regular British Army, soon became familiar with the best military practice of the time, in all its phases from elementary tactics and discipline to strategy and fortification. They were apt scholars and as they became accustomed to the movements of large bodies of troops and the use of artillery, confidence in their ability to wage war in the "regular" manner increased. To be sure some of the English commanders who considered coöperation with "embattled farmers" as beneath their dignity, attempted to belittle them and to slight their officers, but unjust and impolitic as this was, it could not prevent the Americans from obtaining invaluable training, which they put to excellent use twenty years after, against their former instructors.

From the close of the French War, on, the policy of the British Government, or rather that of George the Third who dominated the entire situation, constantly excited hostility in the Colonies. The minor matter of slighting the raw soldiery, soon followed by the major matters of "taxation without representation," haling Colonial offenders before English tribunals for trial, and other arbitrary measures, fomented revolution.

But just as the abolition agitation, over half a century ago, gave rise eventually to the more important question of the maintenance of the Union, so the pre-revolutionary protests against England's administrative acts led up to the consideration of national independence and were but the popular expression of convictions which the Colonists themselves very likely did not fully analyze.

As Professor Fisher clearly shows in his recent original and convincing history* of the period, the irrepressible cause of the Revolution originated in the Reformation itself, which effected a gradual but complete change, not only in the religious but in the political attitude of the masses toward their rulers, throughout a considerable part of Europe. That great movement compelled recognition of the natural law, that is to say the inherent right of men to enjoy personal liberty, and fostered a democratic spirit directly at variance with the feudalistic idea that had so long prevailed there. So in a newer sense, as to time and place, it was this long cherished and insistent desire for self-development, necessitating, theoretically at least, a form of government resting on the consent of the governed, which led these Colonies conveniently adjacent to each other and increasing more rapidly in population than England was, to defy the power of a government too far away, and too inefficient to enforce its policies.

Incidentally, Fisher explodes the theory long held by historians in general, that England profited by her lesson here in ruling her other Colonial possessions. He shows that instead of enlarging their privileges, she restricted them, and although more diplomatic in her attitude to-day, she holds Canada, Australia, and certain other dependencies, for all their premier systems of government, under practically the same parliamentary restraint as obtained here before the Revolution. She has been enabled to do this because in none of these scattered possessions of hers has there ever been a population so strongly united, racially and intellectually, as defied her in America one hundred and forty years ago.

So we see the Revolution as the logical climax of a long period of social evolution,—the mental awakening of the Reformation, the resultant non-conformity in England a century or so later, the removal to America of a multitude of people who held advanced ideas about personal liberty, their gradual negation of monarchical privileges and restrictions, and finally the appeal to arms, from which Democracy, like a champion, emerged triumphant before an astonished world.

* The Struggle for American Independence, by Sydney George Fisher, Vol. I, Chap. II.

Granting the logic of the causes and the fitness of the moment, even then the dénouement might have miscarried had the scene of its enactment been unfavorable. On the contrary and apparently as part of a predestined arrangement, the natural phenomena and vast extent of the colonies afforded a peculiarly advantageous setting for it.

The interior portions of all but three of the thirteen original states are mountainous and history and romance alike have always associated hatred of oppression and indomitable courage with hill-dwelling peoples. Their virility and self-reliance, engendered by the exigencies of rough living, and their intense patriotism are proverbial. So it was for instance with the Thracians, the Swiss, the Welsh and the Highland Scots, who for centuries frustrated their enemies, however numerous and powerful.

In accord with these immemorial attributes the men of Salisbury and the hill-towns all the way into northern Vermont were quick to resent any abuse of authority, and to support their convictions at any cost of life or fortune.

It is true that nearly all of the principal leaders of the Revolutionary movement lived in the seaports which first felt the effects of foreign interference, but when the time came for England to concentrate her wrath upon these commercial centers, their cry for help was heard in the backwoods and on the uplands, and was not ignored.

Ethan Allen was a typical hill-man, physically robust, choleric and aggressive, and constantly seeking new outlets for his energy. He was living here in the days immediately preceding the passage of the Stamp Act, and was constantly going and coming between this town and the New Hampshire Grants, which he and other Salisbury men were opening to settlement. Another such, though of a more academic cast, was Dr. Thomas Young of Amenia, and later of Boston, one of the foremost propagandists of the Sons of Liberty.

It seems like a sweeping statement, but it is one susceptible of proof, to say that the State of Vermont owes more for its establishment to Salisbury than to any other social unit in the world. In Vermont history there are written, as large as that of Washington in Virginia or Trumbull in Connecticut, the names of Genl. Ethan Allen, his older brother, Genl. Ira Allen, Gov. Thomas Chittenden and Chief Justice Nathaniel Chipman. These four all went out from this town, the first three just before the war, and Chipman later after seeing service as a Salisbury soldier. Of lesser men there were dozens who went up to the Grants, not singly with their families, but in parties of families. The draft of the original constitution of Vermont was penned in Lakeville,* and the first meetings of several Vermont towns were held here, prior to their settlement, because so many of their proprietors were resident in this locality.

When we stop to think of the loss entailed upon our town by such waves of emigration as that which swept over Vermont, and others like it, a little later, over western New York and the Connecticut Reserve in Ohio, it is astonishing that our record is as brilliant as it is that our political status has been so well preserved.

But to return from this digression. The closing of the Port of Boston to commerce, in June, 1774, was in effect the spark that touched off the conflagration that had been so many years a-making.

The May Session of the Connecticut General Assembly drew up a moderate, and indeed loyal memorial, or rather protest against this and similar measures. It was generally approved, as an expression of public sentiment, but events were moving too rapidly for any such deprecatory and pacific attitude to be popular for long, especially here, where New York Tories had long been hated for their interference with the settlement of the Grants, and where the doings of the British in Boston were held to have a direct application to all New England.

On August 22, 1774, Salisbury spread upon her records, still to be seen in the room below us, her own Declaration of Rights. Who penned it will probably never be known, but although the phraseology is tinged with the florid rhetoric then in fashion, it was no mean quill-driver who wrote it, but some one who knew, as did the author of the Declaration of Independence itself, the impressive effect of mouth-filling periods. The document is unique: I have seen nothing of the kind in neighboring towns, and it is of real value as showing the forwardness of the spirit here, which was thus manifested even before the assembling of the First Continental Congress. The record runs like this:—

* History of Vermont, by Zadock Thompson, Second Part, p. 107.

Salisbury Aug. 22, 1774.

The Inhabitants of Said Town were convened according to law. Col. Joshua Porter Esq. of said Salisbury being chosen Moderator of said meeting, but having intelligence that his child was very sick, desired to be dismissed from said office.

Voted that Mr. John Everts is Moderator of this meeting.

After reading and deliberating upon the several Acts and Laws denouncing dangerous exertions of Parliamentary Power as well as a partial, absurd and self confuted spirit of Punitive malevolence particularly leveled against the Province of the Massachusetts Bay and being deeply impressed with the visible declension of Virtue and Rectitude of British Administration which threaten insupportable convulsions to the whole Empire and willing as far as in them lies to ward off the impending Ruin and revive the Expiring Liberties of their Country, adopted the following Resolves viz.

1st That as touching the Chartered Rights of this Colony and the memorable Act of Blocking up the Port and Harbour of Boston (in its meaning indefinite and contradictory, in its measures inadequate, in its operations arbitrary and cruel) our sense is well defined and with just spirit asserts in the Resolutions of the last honored House of Representatives—That the sentiments which breathe in every paragraph happily anticipate our own and therefore to enter them on the Records of this town is a publick Testimony of our approbation and justly due thereto.

2nd That in view of the late Act of Parliament regulating or rather destroying the Internal Government of the Province of Massachusetts Bay as an alarming prelude to the total Annihilation of the ancient and unrivaled Glories of the British Constitution as thereby a horrible dart is hurled at the breast of sacred Liberty a precedent established to sanctify the grossest outrages on the Rights of human kind, and a punishing with unparalleled Rigour not a private Individual but a large oppulent and Loyal Province with the loss of its dearest Charter Priviledges without even the formalities of a trial,— That it is therefore the duty of every man who values our Commercial and Political Connexions with Great Britain as the least blessing to unite in all lawful means to effect their total abolition.

3rd That to this end the proposed general Congress of Sage and Virtuous Men from Each Colony will most contribute. In the meantime we cheerfully leave it to that august convention to say in what manner our mite shall be directed.

4th That our poor Brothers of Boston now suffering for us shall share with us the Blessings of our plentiful Harvest. That for the purpose subscriptions be taken in by Hezekiah Fitch Esq., Capt. Elisha Sheldon, Messrs. Luke Camp and Lot Norton and Capt. Samuel Lane.

5th. That as this Town (tho far removed from the principal seat of Action) forms a part of the Reputable Publick and ought to co operate therewith, Col. Joshua Porter and Hezekiah Fitch Esq. Capt. Abiel Camp, Dr. Lemuel Wheeler and Mr. Josiah Stoddard be a committee for the useful purpose of Correspondence with other Committees of this Nature.

6th. That a copy of these Resolves be forthwith transmitted to the Delegates of the General Congress appointed for this Colony.

10 Oct. 1774.

Voted that Capt. Timothy Chittenden be a committee man in addition to the committee chosen on the 22nd day of August last to receive in subscriptions for the poor of the Town of Boston.

Salisbury Dec. 5, 1774.

At a Legal Town Meeting held by adjournment. Whereas by a former meeting it was resolved to adjourn the same till the Rising of the General Continental Congress then sitting that the Inhabitants of this Town might have an opportunity to the Determination of that August Body and the Measures they should recommend to the People of this Continent and having received the Articles of Association agreed upon by them, We do Now Vote Istly that we acquiesce in Accept of the Doings of the late Continental Congress and agreeable to the 11th article of Association Signed by Said Congress appoint Col. Joshua Porter, Mr. Luke Camp, Lieut. Nathaniel Buell, Mr. Lot Norton, Mr. William Beebe, Hezekiah Fitch Esq., and Capt. Elisha Sheldon a committee for the purposes mentioned in Said 11th Article.*

Voted 2ndly that the Doings of said Congress be Recorded at Large on the Records of the Town.

Time does not admit of detailed individual mention of our Revolutionary soldiers: there are one hundred and forty-one of them credited to this town on the military records of the state and a further number, conservatively estimated at fifty, in all likelihood belonged here, but the incompleteness of the records prevents our claiming them, without further investigation.

During the Revolutionary period two hundred and thirty-four electors of Salisbury took the Oath of Fidelity to the state, and from among these loyal men, both those in occasional active service as well as those incapacitated by age or disability, there were chosen annually, standing Committees of Correspondence, committees to procure clothing for soldiers, to provide for soldiers' families, to inspect provisions and so on, and late in the war, committees to hire, with generous bounties, soldiers for the town's quota.

In passing, we must mention a few of the more prominent men and events. Salisbury men's first active service was in connection with the Ticonderoga enterprise in April-May, 1775. A few days after Lexington, some members of the Connecticut Legislature conceived the idea of capturing Fort Ticonderoga,* and using the armament there for the relief of Boston. Capt. Edward Mott, of New London County, was the leading spirit. Authorized by the Assembly and accompanied by half a dozen volunteers, he proceeded directly to Salisbury where the party was increased to sixteen. The expedition was financed by a number of gentlemen, who gave their personal notes to the State Treasurer to secure the necessary funds.† Among these was Col. Joshua Porter of Salisbury, at that time and all during the war (with the exception of one year) one of our representatives in the Legislature. He was also in service at Ticonderoga for twenty-two days, immediately after the capture of the fortress.

Here then is a peg on which to hang our recollections. Probably within a stone's throw of this building was collected the nucleus of the force with which Ethan Allen, both by word and deed, surprised Capt. De La Place, and from what we know of Ethan, I have a lurking suspicion that what he said to the British Commandant was couched in language considerably more familiar and picturesque than the generally attributed order to surrender in "the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

Three of the Salisbury volunteers in this expedition were Josiah Stoddard, Levi Allen (a brother of Ethan) and Samuel Blagden. The party proceeded to Bennington, picking up recruits along the line, and was finally augmented by the addition of one hundred Green Mountain Boys, with Allen at their head.

Benedict Arnold with a force raised under the authority of Massachusetts was present at the capture, but he acted independently, as he refused to serve under Allen, and the credit of carrying out the idea conceived in Connecticut was given to Allen and his men.

Perhaps the most remarkable thing about the Salisbury contingent in the American forces was the number of commissioned officers it contained, serving either in Connecticut Regiments or with the Green Mountain Boys—remarkable because it shows that Salisbury, even then, could produce men of the best type, qualified to command and to share in the conduct of important affairs. This list of thirty-three names is certainly deserving of special notice:—

The town's most distinguished Revolutionary soldier was Elisha Sheldon, who served during the greater part of the war as Colonel of the 2nd Light (Continental) Dragoons. This was one of four crack cavalry regiments raised in 1777. Samuel Blagden of Salisbury was Lieutenant-Colonel and Josiah Stoddard one of the Captains in the same regiment. Several French volunteers of noble birth were also among the officers. Although the regiment was not recruited entirely in Connecticut, it contained several Salisbury privates.

Capt. Josiah Stoddard was one of four brothers, three of whom had varied and interesting careers. He died in service and shortly before his death, a duel which he fought over some military dispute gave occasion to the passage, by the Connecticut General Assembly, of an act to prevent such encounters.* These four brothers were all born, I believe, on the Warner farm near Ore Hill, and the quaint epitaph of one of them, Dr. Darius, may be read to-day, in Town Hill Cemetery.

Speaking of Town Hill reminds me that we just missed being able to enter on our roll of patriots the name of Genl. Richard Montgomery, for whom our Masonic Lodge was named. His tragic death before Quebec was one of the saddest events of the early years of the war. I do not find that he was ever a resident of Salisbury, but the old house that long bore his name was immediately connected with the fortunes of his wife and her family, the Livingstons, who took refuge there in 1777.

Adonijah Strong, afterwards a Colonel in the militia and a Judge of the County Court, was First Lieutenant of Bigelow's Artillery, the first organization in that branch of the service raised in Connecticut. Capt. John Chipman of Salisbury, serving in the Green Mountain regiment, was Commandant at Fort George in 1780, where most of his men were killed or captured, among whom was regimental Quartermaster James Coon, also of Salisbury, who was killed. Capt. Gamaliel Painter of Salisbury commanded a company in the state's regiment of Artificers, which, as a part of the pioneer and construction corps, did great service on many fields. Capt. Noah Lee and a half dozen Salisbury men served in Washington's main army at Yorktown and the preceding battles of that final campaign.

It is pleasant to be able to connect Salisbury's participation in the war with events which were not only successful from our standpoint, but which were accomplished only by distinguished gallantry. The capture of Ticonderoga we have noticed as an event eminently successful and affording the American forces arms and supplies, without which it would have been difficult to prosecute the struggle.

* Records of the State of Conn., Vol. II, p. 271.

Another event illustrative of this daring spirit was the capture of Stony Point in July, 1779. General Wayne, "Mad Anthony," commanded the attack. The fort, with its garrison of some fifteen hundred men, occupied a rocky promontory jutting into the Hudson. The Americans approached with the utmost caution and secrecy, and at midnight, with muskets unloaded and bayonets fixed, charged up the precipitous slopes and before two in the morning occupied the fort. In the right of the two main divisions making the assault marched Capt. Eleazer Claghorn of Salisbury and his company of Connecticut Light Infantry. "The capture of Stony Point was regarded as one of the most brilliant as well as the most important achievements of the war." Two regiments, in which Salisbury had a representation of about forty men, figured in this event, and some of these same men had spent the previous winter at Valley Forge.

During the Revolution it should be borne in mind that the Continental Army composed one part of the American forces and the State Militias the other. They were all militia to start with, but the organization was not sufficiently cohesive to cope with the disciplined British regulars, and the Continental Army proper was organized as a means of meeting the English on an equal footing. The regiments which composed it were mustered into the United States service precisely as were our volunteer troops in the Civil War, and were designated by the respective State names and numbers, as 1st Conn. Continental Line, equivalent to 1st Conn. Volunteer Infantry.

The militia, on the other hand, was usually ordered out on short terms of enlistment, either to reinforce the Continentals, or, in many cases, to conduct operations themselves.

The 14th Regiment of militia, Chas. Burrall of Canaan, Colonel, and Joshua Porter of Salisbury, Lieutenant-Colonel, was composed entirely of men from five towns in northwestern Litchfield County. This regiment saw much active service, chiefly in this and New York state. Col. Porter was in command of a regiment at Peekskill, and engaged in the battles of Saratoga, but whether or not with the 14th does not appear.

No town in Connecticut, not actually the scene of conflict, was so much in the minds of our leaders, both civil and military, as was Salisbury. The crying need of the American forces was not so much of men as of ordnance, and this we could supply. In December, 1776, the General Assembly in its proceedings* said:—

Whereas the article of Cannon is of great importance and indispensably necessary in warlike preparations for offence and defence and much of ours has in the last campaign fallen into the hands of our enemies so as to render them scarce and this state is also applyed to by the Hon^{ble} Continental Congress for a large number to be sent to the northern forts and for the ships, and they are also greatly needed for our more immediate defence, and there appears no way to obtain them but by our foundery at Salisbury, and there is danger that the furnace there will soon be blown out and stopped unless effectual measures are immediately taken to continue the blast and the manufacturing of Cannon as long as possible: Resolved by this Assembly, That Mr. Benjamin Henshaw be and is hereby appointed and directed to repair forthwith to Salisbury and apply to Colo. Joshua Porter, manager of said foundery, and afford him all the assistance in his power, etc.

Whereas it is of the greatest importance for the safety and defence of this and the United States of America, that the foundery of cannon should be continued at Salisbury, and in order thereto that some proper persons should be appointed to procure and furnish wood and coal and other materials for that purpose. Resolved, etc.

The old furnace at Lakeville was dear to the heart of Brother Jonathan and he and his advisers operated it to its full capacity for four or five years, keeping fifty men or more at work constantly, often under guard for fear lest it should be captured by the British on one of the numerous raids into Connecticut or up the Hudson. Great quantities of mortars, cannon (carrying shot up to eighteen pounds, which was nearly the maximum weight at that time), swivel guns for the Navy, shot, shell, hand grenades, camp kettles and other necessaries were made and widely distributed.

The voices of those old cast-iron smooth-bores were raised from fortifications all along the coast, from Providence to Yorktown, from the decks of the infant navy, and from inland battle fields. Later, in the second war with England the Constellation and the Constitution—"Old Ironsides"—won their victories with Salisbury cannon.

The weary years of the great struggle for independence at length drew to a close. From careful estimates it would seem that of our adult male population of about three hundred and fifty, nearly one-half had seen active service in the field and most of the other half active service at home in whatever capacity they were fitted for.

One hundred and twenty-eight years ago this month, May 6, 1783, the citizens in Town Meeting assembled, Voted "that thirty pounds of powder now in the town stock be appropriated to the purpose of congratulating the Continental soldiers belonging to this town on their Discharge and Return," and that "Col. Nathaniel Buell be appointed and desired to address" them "and to present them with the thanks of this Town for their generous and spirited exertions in the cause of their country."

After the close of the war, there followed a period of adjustment to new conditions, recuperation of resources, and growth in population which was interfered with only by the difficulties which led to the war of 1812, a conflict which was decidedly unpopular in New England.

England in her struggle with Napoleon made a partially successful attempt to close all European ports to neutral trade, and in effect this was a direct blow at American commerce, although aimed at the French. Coupled with this, the indiscriminate impressment of American seamen into the British service on the ground that they were deserters from British vessels (in some cases the fact) resulted in the retaliatory Embargo Bill of 1807, prohibiting foreign commerce, and the Enforcement Act of 1809, authorizing collectors of customs to hold American goods going toward the sea, till they had been placed under bond that they would not be taken out of the United States. These measures aroused the most violent opposition in the New England states, whose people believed that their extensive commercial interests were being needlessly sacrificed. New England refused to let her militia assist in the enforcement of these laws, or be used for defence outside of the respective states.

Befooled by Napoleon* and continually harassed by England, it at length became necessary, as Dr. Woodrow Wilson says, for the United States to "do something if only to keep itself in countenance." The country was divided in sentiment and in every way unprepared for war, but nevertheless war was declared on the 18th of June, 1812. Singularly enough England repealed her non-intercourse acts on the 17th of June, just too late to prevent the opening of hostilities. This was a fitting beginning to a war arising from a tangle of diplomatic relations, just as its ending was marked by the occurrence of the battle of New Orleans, after peace was declared. When war actually came New England, of course, supported the government and bore her part, but it was largely one in defence of her own coast line, and she naturally did not participate to any extent in the actions on the northern frontier of New York and the lakes. With the building and manning of the American Navy, which dates as a sea power from that period, she was identified.

For the reasons mentioned there were few Salisbury men at the front in the War of 1812. Their training and situation precluded naval service, the militia was kept at home, and the volunteer force was chiefly recruited from the regions nearest to the northern and western frontiers. The records of a few Salisbury men have been preserved, however, and probably the list could be enlarged if the state records did not append to the names of its soldiers places of enlistment and service rather than of residence. Judge Church says that "several non-com. officers and privates enlisted from this town, but few of whom ever returned." One of them, John O'Cain, while lying mortally wounded on the field of Bridgewater, is said to have discharged his musket twice at the enemy. Ebenezer Bissell, James Graves, James Lane, John Lemley, Nicholas Rugg, Samuel Stephens, Heman White and Philo White served in the Regular Army.

Our present militia organization or National Guard is a small but highly effective force, totalling I believe not over five thousand men, but a hundred years ago it was an immense establishment, for the most part loosely organized and indifferently equipped and drilled. It consisted of no less than thirty-five regiments of infantry and eight of cavalry, divided into eight brigades and four divisions. In it were some forty thousand men, representing theoretically the available fighting force of the state. This town had four companies within it, and it is no wonder that with rotation in office year after year, there was hardly a man of standing in the community who was not entitled to some military prefix: in fact titles were so common that they were frequently lost sight of. I was surprised some years ago to find that the late A. H. Holley attained the rank of Colonel about 1830, as I had never heard it mentioned either in his family or out of it.

From about 1835 to the opening of the Civil War, the militia gradually declined in efficiency and popularity and was certainly ready for the reorganization that it eventually received.

During the War of 1812 about twelve thousand men of this force were called into service within the state, chiefly for short periods during alarms along the Sound.

Elisha Sterling of Salisbury commanded the local regiment, the 14th, during most of the war, and served in that capacity for two months at New London in 1813. In the closing years of the struggle he was promoted successively to the command of the 6th Brigade, and the 4th Division, the latter carrying with it the rank of Major General. In this 14th Regiment Dr. Ovid Plumb was surgeon, Wm. C. Sterling paymaster and Newman Holley adjutant. The captains of the four Salisbury companies in 1813 were David Landon, Eliphalet Whittlesey, James Sheldon and John Ensign, Jr.

Lieut. Edward O. Holley served in the State Corps, as it was called, and the following letter typifies the extent and nature of the militiamen's service.

Union Camp near New London, Sept. 20, 1813.

Dear Brother:

You will very much oblige Lieutenant Holley by writing him the news in Salisbury, or any circumstances that you may think proper for you must be very sensible that a letter from you would be very acceptable, particularly when in a strange place and surrounded by strangers, for as an old man said when in the Green woods it is a desert place. The troops are this day waiting to move into houses, which will make it very comfortable, for the weather is getting cold and stormy. I have had the honor of being introduced to Commodore Decatur—in company with Major Ellsworth we went on board the three ships where we received your attention: after viewing as long as we wished we were set on our way in a Twelve Oared Barge for the Naval Officers think very highly of the Officers of the State Corps. The United States, Macedonian and Sloop of War Hornet compose our fleet and they are expected down as far as New London this week—they have started but got aground. If they get down here our Frolick will be over soon for the Valiant 74 Capt. Oliver and the Frigate Acasta with a sloop of war lie so near watching that we can see their men on board. If they should attack our ships we should have nothing to do unless they should attempt to land which they won't do, but it is generally believed that Decatur intends to run out this storm if the wind is fair and sufficiently strong. If this should be the case, we shall be discharged soon. I have passed my time pleasantly since my arrival in camp for my health has been good and seven officers of us mess together as it is called in camp and all of the 1st Regiment.

New London is a very dirty place and the inhabitants generally jockeys—most of them study to take the advantage of men who are stationed here to defend their lives and properties. I shall probably want you, when my time is out, to come down with my wagon after me, as you will want to come to Hartford about that time, but I will write you again before the time. My love to Sally.

Your affectionate brother

E. O. Holley.

N. Holley.

One son of Salisbury, although serving from New York, won great distinction and a medal from Congress for gallantry in action. This was Major General Peter B. Porter, and the particular exploits in which he was conspicuous, the repulse of the British sortie from Fort Erie, and the last charge that won Lundy's Lane, were illustrative of the same spirit that actuated Salisbury men of the preceding generation at old Ticonderoga and Stony Point. In 1815, President Madison offered him the post of Commander-in-chief of the Army, which he declined. He was Secretary of War during a part of the administration of J. Q. Adams, and was the most distinguished soldier that this town has produced.

The Mexican War, short in its duration and in its progress and conclusion intimately affecting only a part of the country rather than the whole of it, witnessed a brilliant series of American victories. The contest was really one of great political significance, but to New Englanders it was little more than an episode. Connecticut had a representation of seven or eight hundred men in the Regular Army, but the only Salisbury men for whom I find any active service record were Lieut. Albert E.

Church of the Regular Artillery and Albert Johnston, a private in Co. K, 5th U. S. Infantry. Lieut. Church was a son of Chief Justice Samuel Church, graduated from West Point and long occupied the chair of mathematics in that institution.

As a speaker of thirty-five years ago naively remarked, after claiming almost everything for Salisbury, through thirty pages of manuscript,—“The war of the Rebellion was not an institution of Salisbury origin.” It was an “institution,” however, that received our unanimous support. Again as in the old French War and the Revolution, although actuated by different motives, there went forth fully one-half of our eligible men,—three hundred and twenty-five of them; this time to fight at Petersburg and Winchester, Fredericksburg and Gettysburg, Drury’s Bluff, Port Hudson and a score of other fields. Again as at Louisburg and Ticonderoga, Stony Point and Fort Erie, Salisbury courage was tested to the full and proved worthy, as at Cold Harbor, where the Litchfield County regiment, the 2nd Heavies, left three hundred and twenty-three men upon the field, after they had done all that mortals could do to capture Longstreet’s impregnable intrenchments.

But the details of that great struggle I purposely omit, because you already have in enduring form an invaluable account of Salisbury’s part in it, by a participant.*

Of the last war, the Spanish-American, there is but little to be said. Although far-reaching in its effects and of great value to this country, in emphasizing our present national unity, it must take rank, historically, rather as a military episode than a great conflict. It was too short and, except at one or two apparently critical moments, too tame, to arouse much patriotic ardor, or to necessitate general enlistment. The local Camp of Sons of Veterans offered its services as provisional militia, and was neither surprised, nor greatly pained, to find that it was not needed. Aside from this, as far as can be learned, our record is a blank, in this connection.

Conditions have so completely changed in the last two hundred years that we can hardly realize that what was once considered the chief glory of a nation, the ability to subjugate and despoil its neighbors, upon slight pretext or none, is now frowned upon by all Christendom. Arbitration and intervention have gone a long way to prevent war, and may in the course of time eliminate it, but it seems inevitable that conditions shall occasionally arise which will demand an appeal to arms.

To those who insist upon peace at any cost, it may be said that we are here because of wars and not in spite of them—that wars, though in many instances seemingly preventable, have almost invariably eventuated in greater good to the greater number of the people. This is certainly true of all wars that have been fought for high principles, if so much cannot be said of all that have been waged for conquest only. But however we argue it, may we never let our natural abhorrence of so violent and terrible a scourge, blind us to the worth of men of other days, who faced conditions of which we, accustomed only to the bloodless conflicts of the ballot-box, have no conception.

For you, our surviving defenders of the Union, we feel the deepest gratitude for all the hardship that you underwent, and hold you in high esteem, as well, because you had the moral courage to uphold the natural rights of man, and the sense to know that national power and economic progress depend on national harmony and enlightened coöperation.

“And now in conclusion”—trite yet ever welcome phrase—I dare to voice the hope that in time to come, many of our citizens who thoughtlessly desecrate this day, will meet with us, and come to recognize its true significance.

Here, seated at our ease, warmed and invigorated by the fragrant breath of Spring, let us turn our thoughts, reflectively and reverently, toward yonder slope, where stand the mute reminders of so many of the pioneers and soldiers who made Salisbury what it is, and whose mortal bodies have these many years mouldered into native dust. Recall them, not as personages remotely dim and different from ourselves, but rather as our predecessors by a little space of time, who, all their days, were filled as we are now, with joys and sorrows, hopes and fears. They made their mark and passed: we make our mark and pass. Look to it that the future generations know us, too, as men who strove to give our best of heart and hand and brain to Salisbury.
